NIGHT ON CURBAR EDGE

No echo of man's life pursues my ears;
Nothing disputes this Desolation's reign;
Change comes not, this dread temple to profane
Where time by æons reckons, not by years.
Its patient form one crag, sole stranded, rears,
Type of whate'er is destined to remain
While yon still host encamped on night's waste plain

Keeps armed watch, a million quivering spears.

Hushed are the wild and wing'd lives of the moor; The sleeping sheep nestle 'neath ruined wall, Or unhewn stones in random concourse hurled: Solitude, sleepless, listens at Fate's door; And there is built and 'stablisht over all Tremendous silence, older than the world.

CHRISTMAS DAY

The morn broke bright: the thronging people wore

Their best; but in the general face I saw
No touch of veneration or of awe.
Christ's natal day? 'Twas merely one day more
On which the mart agreed to close its door;
A lounging-time by usage and by law
Sanctioned; nor recked they, beyond this, one straw
Of any meaning which for man it bore!

Fated among time's fallen leaves to stray,
We breathe an air that savours of the tomb,
Heavy with dissolution and decay;
Waiting till some new world-emotion rise,
And with the shattering might of the simoom
Sweep clean this dying Past that never dies.

BARREN LEVITY

I THINK the immortal servants of mankind,
Who, from their graves, watch by how slow degrees
The World-Soul greatens with the centuries,
Mourn most Man's barren levity of mind,
The ear to no grave harmonies inclined,
The witless thirst for false wit's worthless lees,
The laugh mistimed in tragic presences,
The eye to all majestic meanings blind.

O prophets, martyrs, saviours, ye were great, All truth being great to you: ye deemed Man more Than a dull jest, God's ennui to amuse: The world, for you, held purport: Life ye wore Proudly, as Kings their solemn robes of state; And humbly, as the mightiest monarchs use.

PEACE AND WAR

The sleek sea, gorged and sated, basking lies;
The cruel creature fawns and blinks and purrs;
And almost we forget what fangs are hers,
And trust for once her emerald-golden eyes;
Though haply on the morrow she shall rise
And summon her infernal ministers,
And charge her everlasting barriers,
With wild white fingers snatching at the skies.

So, betwixt Peace and War, man's life is cast; Yet hath he dreamed of perfect Peace at last Shepherding all the nations ev'n as sheep. The inconstant, moody ocean shall as soon, At the cold dictates of the bloodless moon, Swear an eternity of halcyon sleep.

ESTRANGEMENT

So, without overt breach, we fall apart,
Tacitly sunder—neither you nor I
Conscious of one intelligible Why,
And both, from severance, winning equal smart.
So, with resigned and acquiescent heart,
Whene'er your name on some chance lip may lie,
I seem to see an alien shade pass by,
A spirit wherein I have no lot or part.
Thus may a captive, in some fortress grim,
From casual speech betwixt his warders, learn
That June on her triumphal progress goes Through arched and bannered woodlands; while for him
She is a legend emptied of concern,
And idle is the rumour of the rose.

AT THE GRAVE OF CHARLES LAMB, IN EDMONTON

Nor here, O teeming City, was it meet
Thy lover, thy most faithful, should repose,
But where the multitudinous life-tide flows
Whose ocean-murmur was to him more sweet
Than melody of birds at morn, or bleat
Of flocks in Spring-time, there should Earth enclose
His earth, amid thy thronging joys and woes,
There, 'neath the music of thy million feet.
In love of thee this lover knew no peer.
Thine eastern or thy western fane had made
Fit habitation for his noble shade.
Mother of mightier far, of none more dear,
Not here, in rustic purlieus, O not here,
Thy Elia like an exile should be laid!

TO AUBREY DE VERE

POET, whose grave and strenuous lyre is still For Truth and Duty strung; whose art eschews The lighter graces of the softer Muse, Disdainful of mere craftsman's idle skill: Yours is a soul from visionary hill Watching and hearkening for ethereal news, Looking beyond life's storms and death's cold dews To habitations of the eternal will.

Not mine your mystic creed; not mine, in prayer And worship, at the ensanguined Cross to kneel; But when I mark your faith how pure and fair, How based on love, on passion for man's weal, My mind, half envying what it cannot share, Reveres the reverence which it cannot feel.

TO EDWARD CLODD

FRIEND, in whose friendship I am twice well-starred, A debt not time may cancel is your due; For was it not your praise that earliest drew, On me obscure, that chivalrous regard, Ev'n his, who, knowing fame's first steep how hard, With generous lips no faltering clarion blew, Bidding men hearken to a lyre by few Heeded, nor grudge the bay to one more bard? Bitter the task, year by inglorious year, Of suitor at the world's reluctant ear. One cannot sing for ever, like a bird, For sole delight of singing! Him his mate Suffices, listening with a heart elate; Nor more his joy, if all the rapt heav'n heard.

WRITTEN IN MR. SIDNEY LEE'S 'LIFE OF SHAKESPEARE'

Lee, who in niggard soil hast delved, to find What things soever may be known or guessed Of him that to the ages gives no rest, The world-watched secret peak of human mind; Thy choice was well, who leav'st to fools and blind All visionary, vague, fantastic quest. None to the Presence hath more nearly pressed, Nor hast thou him dis-served to serve mankind.

'Tis said of certain poets, that writ large Their sombre names on tragic stage and tome, They are gulfs or estuaries of Shakespeare's sea. Lofty the praise; and honour enough, to be As children playing by his mighty marge, Glorious with casual sprinklings of the foam.

TO THOMAS BAILEY ALDRICH, IN ANSWER TO HIS SONNET 'ON READING "THE PURPLE EAST"'

IDLE the churlish leagues 'twixt you and me, Singer most rich in charm, most rich in grace! What though I cannot see you face to face? Allow my boast, that one in blood are we! One by that secret consanguinity Which binds the children of melodious race, And knows not the fortuities of place, And cold interposition of the sea. You are my noble kinsman in the lyre: Forgive the kinsman's freedom that I use, Adventuring these imperfect thanks, who late, Singing a nation's woe, in wonder and ire,—Against me half the wise and all the great,—Sang not alone, for with me was your muse.

TO JOHN CHURTON COLLINS

Collins, that with the elect of Greece and Rome Dost daily in familiar converse dwell—Have I not sat, long after bell on bell Hath tolled the noon of night from spire and dome, To hear you summon from their shadowy home The laurelled ghosts obedient to your spell? Bards from the fields of deathless asphodel, And one with locks white as the Chian foam.

Oft be it mine, at your fireside, to meet
The phantoms that assail not, nor alarm;
The gracious lyrist of the Sabine farm,
Coming cool-thoughted from that green retreat;
Or loftier Mantuan, more divinely sweet,
Lord of the incommunicable charm.

ON EXAGGERATED DEFERENCE TO FOREIGN LITERARY OPINION

What! and shall we, with such submissive airs As age demands in reverence from the young, Await these crumbs of praises from Europe flung, And doubt of our own greatness till it bears The signet of your Goethes or Voltaires? We who alone in latter times have sung

ABDICATION

I THINK you never were of earthly frame,
O truant from some charmed world unknown!
A fairy empress, you forsook your throne,
Fled your inviolate court, and hither came;
Donned mortal vesture; wore a woman's name;
Like a mere woman, loved; and so are grown
At last a little human, save alone
For the wild elvish heart not Love could tame.
And one day I believe you will return
To your far isle amid the enchanted sea,—
There, in your realm, perhaps remember me,
Perhaps forget: but I shall never learn!
I, loveless dust within a dreamless urn,
Dead to your beauty's immortality.

WRITTEN IN A COPY OF MR. STEVENSON'S 'CATRIONA

GLORIOUS Sir Walter, Shakespeare's brother-brain, Fortune's invincible victor-victim, Scott, Mere lettered fame, 'tis said, esteeming not, Save as it ministered to weightier gain, Had yet his roseate dream, though dreamed in vain;

The dream, that, crowning his terrestrial lot, A race of great and splendid heirs, begot Of his own loins, o'er Abbotsford should reign.

The Fates forbad, but promised, in amends,
One mighty scion of his heart and mind:
And where strange isles the languid ocean fleck,—
Far from the cold kiss of our northern wind,—
Lo the rare spirit through whom we hail as friends
The immortal Highland maid and Alan Breck!

TO ——, WITH A VOLUME OF VERSE

Ir, on these pale and trembling blooms, full soon The winter of oblivion should descend, Remember, it was in my summer's noon I gave you the poor posy, gentle friend. Remember, how a fickle gust of praise Ruffled my foliage in that perished time, And by the after-light of these dead days Read once again my world-forgotten rhyme. Say: 'Fame his mistress was; he wooed her long, She toyed with him an hour—and flung him by: With me alone the memory of his song Reluctant fades, and hesitates to die.'—
Then burn the book, that eyes less kind than those Vex not the haunted dusk of its repose.

THE EMPTY NEST

I SAUNTER all about the pleasant place
You made thrice pleasant, O my friends, to me;
But you are gone where laughs in radiant grace
That thousand-memoried unimpulsive sea.
To storied precincts of the southern foam,
Dear birds of passage, ye have taken wing,
And ah! for me, when April wafts you home,
The spring will more than ever be the spring.
Still lovely, as of old, this haunted ground;
Tenderly still, the autumn sunshine falls;
And gorgeously the woodlands tower around,
Freak'd with wild light at golden intervals:
Yet, for the ache your absence leaves, O friends,
Earth's lifeless pageantries are poor amends.

THE MOCK SELF

Few friends are mine, though many wights there be

Who, meeting oft a phantasm that makes claim To be myself, and hath my face and name, And whose thin fraud I wink at privily, Account this light impostor very me.

What boots it undeceive them, and proclaim Myself myself, and whelm this cheat with shame? I care not, so he leave my true self free, Impose not on me also; but alas! I too, at fault, bewildered, sometimes take Him for myself, and far from mine own sight, Torpid, indifferent, doth mine own self pass; And yet anon leaps suddenly awake, And spurns the gibbering mime into the night.

TO ONE WHO HAD WRITTEN INDERISION OF THE BELIEF IN IMMORTALITY

DISMISS not so, with light hard phrase and cold, Ev'n if it be but fond imagining,
The hope whereto so passionately cling
The dreaming generations from of old!
Not thus, to luckless men, are tidings told
Of mistress lost, or riches taken wing;
And is eternity a slighter thing,
To have or lose, than kisses or than gold?

Nay, tenderly, if needs thou must, disprove My loftiest fancy, dash my grand desire To see this curtain lift, these clouds retire, And Truth, a boundless dayspring, blaze above And round me; and to ask of my dead sire His pardon for a word that wronged his love.

TO A FRIEND UNITING ANTI-QUARIAN TASTES WITH PRO-GRESSIVE POLITICS

TRUE lover of the Past, who dost not scorn To give good heed to what the Future saith,—Drinking the air of two worlds at a breath, Thou livest not alone in thoughts outworn, But ever helpest the new time be born, Though with a sigh for the old order's death; As clouds that crown the night that perisheth Aid in the high solemnities of morn.

Guests of the ages, at To-morrow's door
Why shrink we? The long track behind us lies,
The lamps gleam and the music throbs before,
Bidding us enter: and I count him wise,
Who loves so well Man's noble memories
He needs must love Man's nobler hopes yet more.

THE FRONTIER

Ar the hushed brink of twilight,—when, as though Some solemn journeying phantom paused to lay An ominous finger on the awestruck day, Earth holds her breath till that great presence go,—A moment comes of visionary glow, Pendulous 'twixt the gold hour and the grey, Lovelier than these, more eloquent than they Of memory, foresight, and life's ebb and flow.

So have I known, in some fair woman's face, While viewless yet was Time's more gross imprint, The first, faint, hesitant, elusive hint Of that invasion of the vandal years Seem deeper beauty than youth's cloudless grace, Wake subtler dreams, and touch me nigh to tears.

IN CITY PENT

O, sweet at this sweet hour to wander free,
Or follow some invisible-beckoning hand,
Among the moody mountains, where they stand
Awed with the thought of their own majesty!
Sweet, at the folding-up of day, to be
Where, on the tattered fringes of the land,
The uncourted flowers of the penurious sand
Are pale against the pale lips of the sea.
Sweetest to dream, on easeful earth reclined,
Far in some forest's ancient idleness,
Under the shadow of its bossy boles;
Beyond the world's pursuit and Care's access;
And hear the wild feet of the elfin wind
Dancing and prancing in mad caprioles.

MISCELLANEOUS SONNETS

MELANCHOLIA

In the cold starlight, on the barren beach,
Where to the stones the rent sea-tresses clave,
I heard the long hiss of the backward wave
Down the steep shingle, and the hollow speech
Of murmurous cavern-lips, nor other breach
Of ancient silence. None was with me, save Thoughts that were neither glad nor sweet nor brave,

But restless comrades, each the foe of each. And I beheld the waters in their might Writhe as a dragon by some great spell curbed And foiled; and one lone sail; and over me The everlasting taciturnity; The august, inhospitable, inhuman night, Glittering magnificently unperturbed.

THE REIGN OF THE MUSE

When Life was dewy and in morning mood,
Then was indeed the Muse's golden reign;
When gods and heroes stept from sculptor's brain,
And perfect with a great perfection stood;
When poets saw the world, that it was good,
Worthy a noble and a limpid strain;
And secret Night, and the unravished main,
Kept holy their mysterious maidenhood.

O happy singers of that vernal day!
Fled is the simple, bounded world ye saw;
Those gods, that never dashed the soul with awe,
Sunny Imaginations, fled are they;
And on Olympus, blind and ruthless Law
Holds unadored his adamantine sway.

SHELLEY

'Twas said the gods, when they Porphyrion slew, And vast Enceladus under Etna laid, Could conquer only with a mortal's aid These mortal giants and their snakish crew. Behold a spirit all fire and air and dew, Who, being of heaven, a heavenly error made: To crush the earthborn giants he essayed, Wholly without ally of earthborn thew. Therefore he conquered not. For in man's mind, The wrath celestial that would monsters slay Must needs a lowlier-sprung confederate find, And charge with an auxiliary of clay. Then only are these Powers, their might combined, Then only and thus, invincible as Day.

THE MODERN SADNESS

OLD Chaucer, the unconquerably young,
Methought thou camest by, and didst incline
An ear to these poor fitful notes of mine,
And didst reprove, albeit with gentle tongue,
A lyre to joyous mood so seldom strung—
So little vowed to laughter or the vine,
Or her that rose a goddess from the brine,
Mother of half the songs the world hath sung.

Blandly arraigning ghost! 'tis all too true,—
A want of joy doth in these strings reside;
Some shade, that troubled not thy clearer day,
Some loss, nor thou nor thy Boccaccio knew.
For thou art of the morning and the May—
I of the autumn and the eventide.

SONG'S APOSTASY

When is the Muse most lustily acclaimed?
When she in paths not native goes astray,
There to disown her record if she may,
Deny her lineage, turn as one ashamed
From all she was, and all that once was famed
To be her realm and birthright. Yet to-day,
Her need is rather to retrace her way
To where of old her steadfast signal flamed;
Thence counting it her glory to bestow
On man the things he is poor in, not the things
Life spawns for ever with a rank excess;
To teach him beauty and not ugliness,
The upward not the downward truth; and so
To the mountains lead him, and the cold clear springs.

TO A STATESMAN AND MAN OF LETTERS

'Trs told how Atlas, putting off the weight
Of Heaven, and sent by Theban Herakles
For the gold apples of the Hesperides,
Came back reluctant to his skiey freight,
All unsubmissive to the load, that late
Had bowed his shoulders and had bent his knees,
While the gods wooed or hunted, or at ease
Smiled from their cloudland, uncompassionate.

Men say, you leave full loth the clime and soil Of realms serene, where no loud combats ring, To bear the fardel of a public toil, After Hesperidean sojourning.

Who shall reproach? Not we to whom you bring The golden fruit, this rich and peaceful spoil.

MISCELLANEOUS SONNETS

NIGHT AND TIME

Beneath me lay a city of Eld, where strove Britain with Rome, and Saxon warred with Dane, And faith o'er faith uprose, and fane o'er fane; Where once, by barrow and cairn and temple and grove,

Some god of dayspring faded before Jove; Where Jove to Christ, where Christ's to Odin's reign,

Did yield; and Odin bowed to Christ again; And each a darkness round a darkness wove.

And Silence was abroad, and Dreams went by; And hearthfires paled and faltered and died out, As dying gods had paled to ghosts and fled; And a blear mist came coldly up like Doubt; And there was only Night, and Time, and I, And city upon city of the dead.

ECCE HOMO

The Cross, the crown of thorns, the anguished eyes,
The cruel wounds unstaunched and bleeding yet—
Ever the same wan form before me set,
All out of tune with the proud, glorying skies!
O, were it not to-day at last more wise
In his immortal greatness to forget
The mortal agony and bloody sweat,
And in his living words the dying cries?
What is to me this show of wounds and death?
To me his death is nought, his life is all!
The one no word of hourly purport saith;
The other, at morn and noon and evenfall,
Rallies me to him with a trumpet's call—
Him, not of Calvary, but of Nazareth.

SACRIFICE

When, in Moriah, the Lord His servant proved,
Bidding him slay his only son; or when
Heaven asked of Agamemnon, King of men,
Iphigenia, his daughter well beloved;
This thought, through forms and symbols far removed,
Brake without cloud upon the human ken:

Brake without cloud upon the human ken: If one thing in thy heart sit throned, 'tis then Thy worthiest gift for God, and best approved.

But when the temple's veil in twain was riven,
And that untimely night amazed the sun,
All this on Calvary was reversed, undone,
Something by man disprized to God being given.
Was not the older way the grander one—
Man with his dearest treasure dowering Heaven?

CROMWELL

LATE was the Voice that called thee forth to fame, O mighty Captain. When the tempest rose, Thou didst awake and arm thee for thy foes. Then, labour, warfare, triumph, power, acclaim; The height that was a throne in all but name; And after lordly life a kingly close. Then, foul dishonour done to thy repose. And then, how slow! the adjudging ages came.

And art thou summed at last and measured? Nay. For what is princely puissance? 'Tis to stand On tops and turrets of the blazing day, Thy speech and acts all naked, thou alone Concealed; thou only, save to Him that planned The labyrinthine hearts of kings, unknown.

MISCELLANEOUS SONNETS

FOR ENGLAND

Or all great deaths on English ground, thine most, Simon de Montfort, doth my spirit stir.

Thou fought'st for England and didst die for her, Thyself of other race, from outland coast.

Law's mandatory and Freedom's, thou thy host Didst hurl against a sceptred law-breaker;

Nor didst thou blench when, black from plume to spur,

Rode Fate on Evesham field, and all was lost.
Then for their lives thou bad'st thy noblest fly:
'Thou dying we would not live,' they made reply,
And dauntless round thy dauntlessness were mown:

And thou with wrath that hewed its way on high Fell'st fighting the steep fight of Liberty, In a crashing forest of the foe, alone.

TO ABERDEEN

(April, 1904)

Ar the great dance and upleap of the year, I came. For me, the northwind's cold accost Was all day long in thy warm welcome lost. How should I fail henceforth to hold thee dear? Hoary thy countenance and thy mien severe, And built of the bones of Mother Earth thou wast,

But on thy heart hath fall'n no touch of frost, O City of the pallid brow austere. Grey, wintry-featured, sea-throned Aberdeen! The stranger thou hast honoured shall not cease, In whatsoever ways he rest or roam, To wish thee noble fortune, fame serene: Thee and thy towers of learning and of peace, That brood benignant on the northern foam.

GORDON

Arab, Egyptian, English—by the sword
Cloven, or pierced with spears, or bullet-mown—
In equal fate they sleep; their dust is grown
A portion of the fiery sands abhorred.
And thou, what hast thou, hero, for reward,
Thou, England's glory and her shame? O'erthrown

Thou liest, unburied, or with grave unknown As his to whom on Nebo's height the Lord Showed all the land of Gilead, unto Dan; Judah sea-fringed; Manasseh and Ephraim; And Jericho palmy, to where Zoar lay; And in a valley of Moab buried him, Over against Beth-Peor, but no man Knows of his sepulchre unto this day.

HOME-ROOTEDNESS

I cannot boast myself cosmopolite;
I own to 'insularity,' although
'Tis fall'n from fashion, as full well I know.
For somehow, being a plain and simple wight,
I am skin-deep a child of the new light,
But chiefly am mere Englishman below,
Of island-fostering; and can hate a foe,
And trust my kin before the Muscovite.
Whom shall I trust if not my kin? And whom Account so near in natural bonds as these
Born of my mother England's mighty womb,
Nursed on my mother England's mighty knees,
And lull'd as I was lull'd in glory and gloom
With cradle-song of her protecting seas?

REPORTED CONCESSIONS

So we must palter, falter, cringe, and shrink,
And when the bully threatens, crouch or fly.—
There are who tell me with a shuddering eye
That war's red cup is Satan's chosen drink.
Who shall gainsay them? Verily I do think
War is as hateful almost, and well-nigh
As ghastly, as this terrible Peace whereby
We halt for ever on the crater's brink
And feed the wind with phrases, while we know
There gapes at hand the infernal precipice
O'er which a gossamer bridge of words we throw,
Yet cannot choose but hear from the abyss
The sulphurous gloom's unfathomable hiss
And simmering lava's subterranean flow.

OUR EASTERN TREASURE

In cobwebb'd corners dusty and dim I hear A thin voice pipingly revived of late, Which saith our India is a cumbrous weight, An idle decoration, bought too dear. The wiser world contemns not gorgeous gear; Just pride is no mean factor in a State; The sense of greatness keeps a nation great; And mighty they who mighty can appear. It may be that if hands of greed could steal From England's grasp the envied orient prize, This tide of gold would flood her still as now: But were she the same England, made to feel A brightness gone from out those starry eyes, A splendour from that constellated brow?

NIGHTMARE

(WRITTEN DURING APPARENT IMMINENCE OF WAR)

In a false dream I saw the Foe prevail.

The war was ended; the last smoke had rolled Away: and we, erewhile the strong and bold, Stood broken, humbled, withered, weak and pale, And moan'd, 'Our greatness is become a tale To tell our children's babes when we are old. They shall put by their playthings to be told How England once, before the years of bale, Throned above trembling, puissant, grandiose, calm, Held Asia's richest jewel in her palm; And with unnumbered isless barbaric, she The broad hem of her glistering robe impearl'd; Then, when she wound her arms about the world, And had for vassal the obsequious sea.'

THE IDEAL POPULAR LEADER

HE is one who counts no public toil so hard
As idly glittering pleasures; one controlled
By no mob's haste, nor swayed by gods of gold;
Prizing, not courting, all just men's regard;
With none but Manhood's ancient Order starred,
Nor crowned with titles less august and old
Than human greatness; large-brained, limpidsouled;

Whom dreams can hurry not, nor doubts retard; Born, nurtured of the People; living still The People's life; and though their noblest flower, In nought removed above them, save alone In loftier virtue, wisdom, courage, power, The ampler vision, the serener will, And the fixed mind, to no light dallyings prone.

AFTER THE TITANS

ENGLAND, in good Victoria's latter reign,
Two potent councillors by turns have led,
Little alike in build of heart or head,
Yet owning this resemblance,—that the twain
Are visibly of Britain's ancient strain,
Sprung of the lineage of her stalwart dead,
Strong souls and massive, such as England bred
In the brave day that cometh not again.

To these succeeds another, newer race, Men light and slight, on narrower scale designed, Offspring and image of the change we trace In art, arms, action, manners, morals, mind,— The burly oak departing, in its place The lissom willow, swaying to the wind.

FRANCE*

LIGHT-HEARTED heroine of tragic story! Nation whom storm on storm of ruining fate Unruined leaves,-nay, fairer, more elate, Hungrier for action, more athirst for glory! World-witching queen, from flery floods and gory Rising eternally regenerate, Clothed with great deeds and crowned with dreams more great,

Spacious as Fancy's boundless territory! Little thou lov'st our island, and perchance Thou heed'st as little her reluctant praise; Yet let her, in these dark and bodeful days, Sinking old hatreds 'neath the sundering brine. Immortal and indomitable France, Marry her tears, her alien tears, to thine.

^{* 25}th June, 1894, the day after the murder of President Carnot.

THE WORLD IN ARMOUR

Under this shade of crimson wings abhorred That never wholly leaves the sky screne,—
While Vengeance sleeps a sleep so light, between Dominions that acclaim Thee overlord,— Sadly the blast of Thy tremendous word,
Whate'er its mystic purport may have been,
Echoes across the ages, Nazarene:
Not to bring peace Mine errand, but a sword.

For lo, Thy world uprises and lies down In armour, and its Peace is War, in all Save the great death that weaves War's dreadful crown;

War unennobled by heroic pain, War where none triumph, none sublimely fall, War that sits smiling, with the eyes of Cain.

II

When London's Plague, that day by day enrolled His thousands dead, nor deigned his rage to abate Till grass was green in silent Bishopsgate, Had come and passed like thunder,—still, 'tis told, The monster, driven to earth, in hovels old And haunts obscure, though dormant, lingered late, Till the dread Fire, one roaring wave of fate, Rose, and swept clean his last retreat and hold.

In Europe live the dregs of Plague to-day,
Dregs of full many an ancient Plague and dire,—
Old wrongs, old lies of ages blind and cruel.
What if alone the world-war's world-wide fire
Can purge the ambushed pestilence away?
Yet woe to him that idly lights the fuel!

III

A moment's fantasy, the vision came Of Europe dipped in fiery death, and so Mounting re-born, with vestal limbs aglow, Splendid and fragrant from her bath of flame.

THE WORLD IN ARMOUR

It fleeted; and a phantom without name, Sightless, dismembered, terrible, said: 'Lo, I am that ravished Europe men shall know After the morn of blood and night of shame.'

The spectre passed, and I beheld alone
The Europe of the present, as she stands,
Powerless from terror of her own vast power,
'Neath novel stars, beside a brink unknown;
And round her the sad Kings, with sleepless hands,
Piling the fagots, hour by doomful hour.

TO A LADY, WITH THE AUTHOR'S ENTITLED SONNETS THE PURPLE EAST'

DAUGHTER of Ireland,—nay, 'twere better said, Daughter of Ireland's beauty, Ireland's grace, Child of her charm, of her romance; whose face Is legendary with her glories fled! The shadow of her living griefs and dead I pray you to put by a little space, And mourn with me an ancient Orient race Outcast and doomed and disinherited.

Though Wrong be strong, though thrones be built on crimes, To know you, Lady, is to doubt no more That in the world are mightier powers than these;

That heaven, the ocean, gains on earth, the shore; And that deformity and hate are Time's,

And love and loveliness Eternity's.

THE TURK IN ARMENIA

What profits it, O England, to prevail
In arts and arms, and mighty realms subdue,
And ocean with thine argosies bestrew,
And wrest thy tribute from each golden gale,
If idly thou must hearken to the wail
Of women martyred by the turbaned crew
Whose tenderest mercy was the sword that slew,
And hazard not the dinting of thy mail?
We deemed of old thou held'st a charge from Him
Who sits companioned by His seraphim,
To smite the wronger with thy destined rod.
Wait'st thou His sign? Enough, the unanswered cry

Of virgin souls for vengeance, and on high The gathering blackness of the frown of God!

HOW LONG?

Heaped in their ghastly graves they lie, the breeze Sickening o'er fields where others vainly wait For burial: and the butchers keep high state In silken palaces of perfumed ease.

The panther of the desert, matched with these, Is pitiful; beside their lust and hate, Fire and the plague-wind are compassionate, And soft the fang'd lips of the ravening seas. How long shall they be borne? Is not the cup Of crime yet full? Doth devildom still lack Some consummating crown, that we hold back The scourge, and in Christ's borders give them room?

How long shall they be borne, O England? Up, Tempest of God, and sweep them to their doom!

REPUDIATED RESPONSIBILITY

I HAD not thought to hear it voiced so plain,
Uttered so forthright, on their lips who steer
This nation's course: I had not thought to hear
That word re-echoed by an English thane,
Guilt's maiden-speech when first a man lay slain,
'Am I my brother's keeper?' Yet full near
It sounded, and the syllables rang clear
As the immortal rhetoric of Cain.
'Wherefore should we, sirs, more than they—or

'Wherefore should we, sirs, more than they—or they—

Unto these helpless reach a hand to save?' An Englishman, in this our English air, Speaking for England? Then indeed her day Slopes to its twilight, and, for Honour, there Is needed but a requiem, and a grave.

THE KNELL OF CHIVALRY

O vanished morn of crimson and of gold,
O youth and roselight and romance, wherein
I read of paynim and of paladin,
And Beauty snatched from ogre's dungeoned hold!
Ever the recreant, then, in dust was rolled,
Ever the true knight in the joust did win,
Ever the scaly shape of monstrous Sin
At last lay vanquished, fold on writhing fold.
Was it all false, that world of princely deeds,
The splendid quest, the good fight ringing clear?
Yonder the Dragon ramps with fiery gorge,
Yonder the victim faints and gasps and bleeds;
But in his merry England our St. George
Sleeps a base sleep beside his idle spear.

ENGLAND TO AMERICA

O TOWERING daughter, Titan of the West,
Behind a thousand leagues of foam secure;
Thou toward whom our inmost heart is pure
Of ill intent: although thou threatenest
With most unfilial hand thy mother's breast,
Not for one breathing-space may Earth endure
The thought of War's intolerable cure
For such vague pains as vex to-day thy rest!
But if thou hast more strength than thou canst spend

In tasks of Peace, and find'st her yoke too tame, Help us to smite the cruel, to befriend The succourless, and put the false to shame. So shall the ages laud thee, and thy name Be lovely among nations to the end.

THE TIRED LION

SPEAK once again, with that great note of thine, Hero withdrawn from Senates and their sound Unto thy home by Cambria's northern bound,—Speak once again, and wake a world supine. Not always, not in all things, was it mine To follow where thou led'st: but who hath found Another man so shod with fire, so crowned With thunder, and so armed with wrath divine? Lift up thy voice once more! The nation's heart Is cold as Anatolia's mountain snows.

O, from these alien paths of base repose Call back thy England, ere thou too depart—Ere, on some secret mission, thou too start With silent footsteps, whither no man knows.

A TRIAL OF ORTHODOXY

The clinging children at their mother's knee Slain; and the sire and kindred one by one Flayed or hewn piecemeal; and things nameless done,

Not to be told: while imperturbably
The nations gaze, where Rhine unto the sea,
Where Seine and Danube, Thames and Tiber run,
And where great armies glitter in the sun,
And great kings rule, and man is boasted free!
What wonder if yon torn and naked throng
Should doubt a Heaven that seems to wink
and nod,

And having moaned at noontide, 'Lord, how long?'

Should cry, 'Where hidest Thou?' at evenfall, At midnight, 'Is He deaf and blind, our God?' And ere day dawn, 'Is He indeed at all?'

'IF'

YEA, if ye could not, though ye would, lift hand—Ye halting leaders—to abridge. Hell's reign; If, for some cause ye may not yet make plain, Yearning to strike, ye stood as one may stand Who in a nightmare sees a murder planned And hurrying to its; issue, and though fain To stay the knife, and fearless, must remain Madly inert, hield fast by ghostly band;—If such your plight, most hapless ye of men! But if ye, could and would not, O, what plea, Think ye, shall stead you at your trial, when The thunder-cloud of witnesses shall loom, With Ravished Childhood on the seat of doom, At the Assizes of Eternity?

TO THE SULTAN

Caliph, I did thee wrong. I hailed thee late 'Abdul the Damned,' and would recall my word. It merged thee with the unillustrious herd Who crowd the approaches to the infernal gate—Spirits gregarious, equal in their state As is the innumerable ocean bird, Gannet or gull, whose wandering plaint is heard On Ailsa or Iona desolate. For, in a world where cruel deeds abound, The merely damned are legion: with such souls Is not each hollow and cranny of Tophet crammed? Thou with the brightest of Hell's aureoles Dost shine supreme, incomparably crowned, Immortally, beyond all mortals, damned.

SONNETS ON PUBLIC AFFAIRS

THE ENEMY

Unskilled in Letters, and in Arts unversed;
Ignorant of empire; bounded in their view
By the lone billowing veldt, where they upgrew
Amid great silences; a people nursed
Apart—the far-sown seed of them that erst
Not Alva's sword could tame: now, blindly hurled
Against the march of the majestic world,
They fight and die, with dauntless bosoms curst.

Crazed, if you will; demented, not to yield Ere all be lost! And yet it seems to me They fought as noblest Englishmen did use To fight, for freedom; and no Briton he, Who to such valour in a desperate field A knightly salutation can refuse.

FORCE AND FREEDOM

O, doubtless ye can trample and enchain,
Sow death and breathe out winter; but can ye
Persuade the destined bondsman he is free,
Or with a signal build the summer again?
O, ye can hold the rivulets of the plain
A little while from nuptials with the sea,
But the fierce mountain-stream of Liberty
Not edicts and not hosts may long restrain.
For this is of the heights and of the deeps,
Born of the heights and in the deeps conceived.
This, 'mid the lofty places of the mind,
Gushes pellucid, vehemently upheaved;
And tears and heart's blood hallow it, as it sweeps
Invincibly on, co-during with mankind.

TO ONE ESPOUSING UNPOPULAR TRUTH

Nor yet, dejected though thy cause, despair,
Nor doubt of Dawn for all her laggard wing.
In shrewdest March the earth was mellowing,
And had conceived the Summer unaware.
With delicate ministration, like the air,
The sovereign forces that conspire to bring
Light out of darkness, out of Winter, Spring,
Perform unseen their tasks benign and fair.
The sower soweth seed o'er vale and hill,
And long the folded life waits to be born;
Yet hath it never slept, nor once been still:
And clouds and suns have served it night and morn;

The winds are of its secret council sworn; And Time and nurturing Silence work its will.

THE INEXORABLE LAW

We too shall pass, we too shall disappear,
Ev'n as the mighty nations that have waned
And perished. Not more surely are ordained
The crescence and the cadence of the year,
High-hearted June, October spent and sere,
Than this grey consummation. We have reigned
Augustly; let our part be so sustained
That Time, far hence, shall hold our memory
dear!

Let it be said: 'This Mistress of the sword And conquering prow, this Empire swoln with spoils,

Yet served the human cause, yet strove for Man; Hers was the purest greatness we record; We whose ingathered sheaves her tilth foreran, Whose peace comes of her tempests and her toils.'

SONNETS ON PUBLIC AFFAIRS

THE SLAIN

Partners in silence, mates in noteless doom, Peers in oblivion's commonalty merged; Unto like deeds by differing mandates urged, And equalled in the unrespective tomb; Leal or perfidious, cruel or tender, whom Precipitate fate hath of your frailties purged; Whom duly the impartial winds have dirged, In autumn or the glorying vernal bloom: Already is your strife become as nought; Idle the bullet's flight, the bayonet's thrust, The senseless cannon's dull, unmeaning word; Idle your feud; and all for which ye fought To this arbitrament of loam referred, And cold adjudication of the dust.

TO THE PRINCE OF WALES (NOW KING EDWARD) ON HIS ESCAPE FROM ASSASSINATION

Sir, we have seen ill deeds and black-robed years. The liberal Tsar that ever wrought or planned His people's weal; and Carnot just and bland; And Lincoln whom a continent reveres; All these by parity of doom are peers; With others high of place in many a land; And her, most foully stricken on Leman's strand, The imperial head grown grey in tragic tears.

Not theirs your fate: no dastard hand bereaves
Us of our kingliest: and we praise to-day
That wise detachment from the party fray,
That kindly thought which all that claims, receives!
These things we love, nor yet shall lack, we pray,
In happier times when Peace comes with her sheaves.

SONNETS ON PUBLIC AFFAIRS

LA HAUTE POLITIQUE

I sailed in fancy by a beach of gold,
Toward a golden city like a star,
That quivered on the morning from afar—
Turrets and domes and airy spires untold.
But when I neared the marble quays, behold,
Offal and ordure; lurking Shames, that mar
The hue of sunlight; Plagues that deadliest are;
And ancient Tribulations manifold.

So fair, so foul, I said, the craft of State!
Such is the glory, such the light that clings
About the footsteps and the deeds of kings;
And in the shadow Terror sits, and Hate;
The lazars crouch, the bravo lies in wait;
And heaven is mocked with all unheavenly things.

MEN AS WARES

O MIGHTY Nation, must thou now depart From all great ways, and having led the van Of the world's hope, turn back and deal in Man, Counting as merchandise the human heart, Casting the soul as goods upon the mart? And save the thunderstroke's monition, can Nought give thee pause, nor lamp serener than The lightning show thee by what brink thou art?

Vain for the Muse, whom no man heeds, to warn! Silent upon her mountains let her stray, Or murmur dirges for the loftier day, And its heroic promise brought to scorn; The brave ideals shipwrecked and forlorn, And honour as a bauble flung away.

POEMS (OTHER THAN SONNETS) ON PUBLIC AFFAIRS

SKETCH OF A POLITICAL PERSONAGE

(1885)

THERE is a race of men, who master life,
Their victory being inversely as their strife;
Who capture by refraining from pursuit;
Shake not the bough, yet load their hands with fruit;

The earth's high places who attain to fill, By most indomitably sitting still. While others, full upon the fortress hurled, Lay fiery siege to the embattled world, Of such rude arts their natures feel no need; Greatly inert, they lazily succeed; Find in the golden mean their proper bliss, And doing nothing, never do amiss; But lapt in all men's praises live, and die By all regretted, nobody knows why.

Cast in this fortunate Olympian mould, The admirable * * behold; Whom naught could dazzle or mislead, unless "Twere the wild light of fatal cautiousness; Who never takes a step from his own door But he looks backward ere he looks before. When once he starts, 'twere rash indeed to say That he will travel far upon his way: But this is sure, he will not turn aside, Or at the beck of Jack o' Lanthorn ride. The flippant deem him dull and saturnine, The summed-up phlegm of a whole ducal line; Others admire that sober mass and weight— A simple Doric pillar of the State, So inharmonious with the baser style Of neighbouring columns grafted on the pile, So proud and imperturbable and chill, Chosen and matched so excellently ill, He seems a monument of pensive grace, Ah, how majestically out of place!

Would that some call he could not choose but heed—

Of private passion or of public need— At last might sting to life that slothful power, And snare him into greatness for an hour!

ENGLAND AND HER COLONIES

She stands a thousand-wintered tree,
By countless morns impearled;
Her broad roots coil beneath the sea,
Her branches sweep the world;
Her seeds, by careless winds conveyed,
Clothe the remotest strand
With forests from her scatterings made,
New nations fostered in her shade,
And linking land with land.

O ye by wandering tempest sown
'Neath every alien star,
Forget not whence the breath was blown
That wafted you afar!
For ye are still her ancient seed
On younger soil let fall—
Children of Britain's island-breed,
To whom the Mother in her need
Perchance may one day call.

A NEW YEAR'S PRAYER

In the blanched night, when all the world lay frore,

And the cold moon, the passionless, looked down

Commiserating man the passion-curst-

Man made in passion and by passion marred—

Through the pale silence, on the New Year's verge,

This prayer fled forth, and trembled up to heaven:—

'O Thou whose dwelling is eternity;
Who seest the hunger and the toil of men,
And how the love of life and wife and babe
Is brother of hate and sire of deeds of death;
Give peace—give peace: peace in our time, O
Lord!

A NEW YEAR'S PRAYER

But if we needs must march to peace through war,

Spare not the sowers who amid Thy corn Mingled the lethal seed of this red flower. Make terrible Thine arm against all thieves, Whether in mart or on imperial throne; And scatter with Thy thunder the unjust Who turn Thy pleasance to a wilderness, To battle-fields Thy vineyard, with mailed feet Trampling the joyous vine of life in blood.

'Purge and renew this England, fair of old, When Alfred's wisdom poised the sacred scales; Or when the high fanes lacked not hero-priests, Langtons and Anselms, fearless friends of men; Yea, and in later times, when Liberty, Her crowned and crosiered enemies combating, Stood proudlier 'stablished by a false king's fall, Mighty from Milton's pen and Cromwell's sword.'

New Year's Eve, 1892.

A NEW NATIONAL ANTHEM

God save our ancient land,
God bless our noble land,
God save this land!
Yea, from war's pangs and fears,
Plague's tooth and famine's tears,
Ev'n unto latest years
God save this land!

God bless our reigning race!
Truth, honour, wisdom, grace,
Guide their right hand!
Yet, though we love their sway,
England is more than they:
God bless their realm, we pray,
God save our land!

Too long the gulf betwixt
This man and that man fixt
Yawns yet unspanned.

A NEW NATIONAL ANTHEM

Too long, that some may rest, Tired millions toil unblest. God lift our lowliest, God save this land!

God save our ancient land,
God bless our noble land,
God save our land!
Earth's empires wax and wane,
Man's might is mown as grain:
God's arm our arm sustain!
God save our land!

EUROPE AT THE PLAY

O LANGUID audience, met to see
The last act of the tragedy
On that terrific stage afar,
Where burning towns the footlights are,—
O listless Europe, day by day
Callously sitting out the play!

So sat, with loveless count'nance cold, Round the arena, Rome of old. Pain, and the ebb of life's red tide, So, with a calm regard, she eyed, Her gorgeous vesture, million-pearled, Splashed with the blood of half the world. High was her glory's noon: as yet She had not dreamed her sun could set! As yet she had not dreamed how soon Shadows should vex her glory's noon.

EUROPE AT THE PLAY

Another's pangs she counted nought; Of human hearts she took no thought; But God, at nightfall, in her ear Thundered His thought exceeding clear.

Perchance in tempest and in blight,
On Europe, too, shall fall the night!
She sees the victim overborne,
By worse than ravening lions torn.
She sees, she hears, with soul unstirred,
And lifts no hand, and speaks no word,
But vaunts a brow like theirs who deem
Men's wrongs a phrase, men's rights a dream.
Yet haply she shall learn, too late,
In some blind hurricane of Fate,
How fierily alive the things
She held as fool's imaginings,
And, though circuitous and obscure,
The feet of Nemesis how sure.

HOW WEARY IS OUR HEART!

Or kings and courts; of kingly, courtly ways In which the life of man is bought and sold; How weary is our heart these many days!

Of ceremonious embassies that hold Parley with Hell in fine and silken phrase, How weary is our heart these many days!

Of wavering counsellors neither hot nor cold, Whom from His mouth God speweth, be it told How weary is our heart these many days!

Yea, for the ravelled night is round the lands, And sick are we of all the imperial story. The tramp of Power, and its long trail of pain; The mighty brows in meanest arts grown hoary; The mighty hands, That in the dear, affronted name of Peace

HOW WEARY IS OUR HEART!

Bind down a people to be racked and slain;
The emulous armies waxing without cease,
All-puissant all in vain;
The pacts and leagues to murder by delays,
And the dumb throngs that on the deaf thrones
gaze;

The common loveless lust of territory;
The lips that only babble of their mart,
While to the night the shrieking hamlets blaze;
The bought allegiance, and the purchased praise,
False honour, and shameful glory;
Of all the evil whereof this is part,
How weary is our heart,
How weary is our heart these many days!

THE AWAKENING

Behold, she is risen who lay asleep so long, Our England, our Belovèd! We have seen The swelling of the waters, we have heard The thundering cataracts call. Behold, she is risen,

Lovelier in resurrection than the face
Of vale or mountain, when, with storming tears,
At all Earth's portals knocks the importunate Spring.

We watched her sleeping. Day and night we strove

With the dread spell that drowsed her heart.

And thrice

In the unrest of her sick dreams she stirred, Half raised herself, half oped her lips and lids, And thrice the evil charm prevailed, and thrice She fell back forceless. But behold, she is risen, The Hope of the World is risen, is risen anew.

THE AWAKENING

O England! O Belovèd! O Re-born! Look that thou fall not upon sleep again! Thou art a star among the nations yet: Be thou a light of succour unto them That else are lost in blind and whelming seas. Around them is the tempest; over them, Cold splendours of the inhospitable night, Augustly unregardful: thou alone Art still the North Star to the labouring ship, In friendless ocean the befriending orb, And if thou shine not, whither is she steered? Shine in thy glory, shine on her despair, Shine lest she perish—lest of her no more Than some lorn flotsam of mortality Remain to catch the first auroral gleam, When, in the East, flames the reluctant dawn.

AFTER DEFEAT*

- Pray, what chorus this? At the tragedy's end, what chorus?
- Surely bewails it the brave, the unhappily starred, the abandoned
- Sole unto fate, by yonder invincible kin of the vanquished?
- Surely salutes it the fallen, not mocks the protagonist prostrate?
- Hark! 'Make merry. Ye dreamed that a monster sickened: behold him
- Rise, new-fanged. Make merry. A hero troubled and shamed you.
- Jousting in desperate lists, he is trodden of giants in armour.
- Mighty is Night. Make merry. The Dawn for a season is frustrate.'
 - * Written at the close of the Græco-Turkish War.

AFTER DEFEAT

Thus, after all these ages, a pæan, a loud jubilation,

Mounts, from peoples bemused, to a heaven refraining its thunder.

ON BEING STYLED 'PRO-BOER'

FRIEND, call me what you will: no jot care I: I that shall stand for England till I die. England! The England that rejoiced to see Hellas unbound, Italy one and free; The England that had tears for Poland's doom, And in her heart for all the world made room; The England from whose side I have not swerved; The immortal England whom I, too, have served, Accounting her all living lands above, In Justice, and in Mercy, and in Love.

LINES TO THE RIGHT HONOUR-ABLE JAMES BRYCE, M.P., IN ANSWER TO A LETTER

THANKS for your heartening word, that came from one

Acquainted with the story of many peoples, Acquainted with the life of many peoples; An honoured labourer for the amity And weal of peoples, loftier things than sway.

Thanks for your heartening word, that came to one

Fated to hoist a somewhat lonely sail,
Against the wind and tide; that came to one
Fated to be at variance with the time,
Touching the parts it hisses or applauds;
Who liefer would sit mute, and be withdrawn
Far into some consolatory Past,
Among old voices, the unperishing,
Save that such words of cheer the courier Hours
Bring when most needed, words restorative,

Coming across the silence or dispraise, Coming across the welter and the gloom.

I lose not hope or faith in this great land, This many-victoried, many-heroed land, Though hope oft sinks, and faith is hard to hold. She that with ruthless John and truthless Charles, And James the despicable, by voice or sword Strove, and not vainly, for her liberties; She that from him, the humbler of the world, Whose thunderous heel was on submitted thrones, Kept whole and virginal her liberties; She that so joyed at sound of other lands Heaved high with passion for their libertics; Shall yet recall—'tis thus at least I dream, Being her lover, and dreaming from the heart— Shall yet recall her desert-wandering soul; Shall yet remember—she forgets to-day— How the munificent hands of Life are full Of gifts more covetable an hundredfold Than man's dominion o'er reluctant man; And come upon old wealth disused and idle, Her scorned estate and slighted patrimony, Auriferous veins in all the field of being, With those shy treasures no self-seeking wins, Rather self-search, and grace of fortunate hours.

LINES TO THE HON. J. BRYCE, M.P.

The Cæsars and the Alexanders pass,
While he that drank the hemlock, He that drank
The Cup more dread on Calvary hill, remain,
Servants and mighty conquerors of the world.
The great achievement of the human mind
Is the idea of Justice. More than arts
And sciences, than faiths and rituals, this
Lifts all our life above the life of beasts.
Chiefly by this are we a nobler kind,
The Earth's elect and separate; lost to this,
Our state is as the state of beasts indeed,
That snatch their meat, one from another's mouth,
And without pain another's pain behold;
Though these are guiltless, knowing not light or law.

ROME AND ANOTHER

She asked for all things, and dominion such As never man had known,
The gods first gave; then lightly, touch by touch,
O'erthrew her seven-hilled throne.

Imperial Power, that hungerest for the globe, Restrain thy conquering feet, Lest the same Fates that spun thy purple robe Should weave thy winding-sheet.

AN IDEAL PASSION

Nor she, the England I behold, My mistress is; nor yet The England beautiful of old, Whom Englishmen forget.

The England of my heart is she, Long hoped and long deferred, That ever promises to be, And ever breaks her word.

THE TRUE IMPERIALISM

HERE, while the tide of conquest rolls Against the distant golden shore, The starved and stunted human souls Are with us more and more.

Vain is your Science, vain your Art, Your triumphs and your glories vain, To feed the hunger of their heart And famine of their brain.

Your savage deserts howling near,
Your wastes of ignorance, vice, and shame,—
Is there no room for victories here,
No field for deeds of fame?

Arise and conquer while ye can
The foe that in your midst resides,
And build within the mind of Man
The Empire that abides.

THE DRAGONS

Prince Vortigern—so run the ancient tales—A stronghold sought to build in wildest Wales; But some fell Power frustrated each assay, And nightly wrecked the labours of the day; Till Merlin came, and bade the builders all, Beneath the escarp'd and many-bastioned wall, Dig deep; and lo, two dragons, o'er whose lair Nothing secure might rise, lay sleeping there.

Search the foundations, you that build a State; For if the dragon forms of Wrath and Hate Lie coiled below, and darkly bide their hour, Fear walks the rampart, Fear ascends the tower. And let it not content you that they sleep: Drive them with strong enchantments to the deep. First of such charms is Perfect Justice; then Comes the heart's word that conquers beasts and men.

No other craft shall serve—no spells but these Drive the old dragons to the whelming seas.

ALPHA AND OMEGA

HE throned her in the gateways of the world, He 'stablished her on high before the peoples.

He raised her as a watch-tower from the wave, He built her as a lighthouse on the waters.

He maketh and unmaketh without end, And He alone, who is First and Last, shall judge her.

ODE ON THE DAY OF THE CORONATION OF KING EDWARD VII

Ι

Sire, we have looked on many and mighty things In these eight hundred summers of renown Since the Gold Dragon of the Wessex Kings On Hastings field went down; And slowly in the ambience of this crown Have many crowns been gathered, till, to-day, How many peoples crown thee, who shall say? Time, and the ocean, and some fostering star, In high cabal have made us what we are, Who stretch one hand to Huron's bearded pines, And one on Kashmir's snowy shoulder lay, And round the streaming of whose raiment shines The iris of the Australasian spray. For waters have connived at our designs, And winds have plotted with us—and behold,

POEMS ON PUBLIC AFFAIRS

Kingdom in kingdom, sway in oversway,
Dominion fold in fold:
Like to that immemorial regal stone
Thy namesake from the northland reft away,
Symbol of sovereignty and spoil of fray,
And closed in England's throne.
So wide of girth this little cirque of gold,
So great we are, and old.
Proud from the ages are we come, O King;
Proudly, as fits a nation that hath now
So many dawns and sunsets on her brow,
This duteous heart we bring.

The kings thy far forerunners; he that came
And smote us into greatness; he whose fame,
In dark armipotence and ivied pride,
Towers above Conway's tide,
And where Carnarvon ponders on the sea;
He, that adventurous name,
Who left at Agincourt the knightly head
Of France and all its charging plumes o'erthrown,
But hath in Shakespeare's conquests merged his own;

And she, a queen, yet fashioned king-like, she

ODE ON CORONATION OF EDWARD VII.

Before whose prows, before whose tempests, fled Spain on the ruining night precipitately; And that worn face, in camps and councils bred, The guest who brought us law and liberty Raised well-nigh from the dead; Yea, she herself, in whose immediate stead Thou standest, in the shadow of her soul; All these, O King, from their seclusion dread, And guarded palace of eternity, Mix in thy pageant with phantasmal tread, Hear the long waves of acclamation roll, And with yet mightier silence marshal thee To the awful throne thou hast inherited.

III

Lo, at the Earth's high feast, ere Autumn bring His afterthoughts on greatness to her ear, And with monitions of mortality Perturb the revelling year, Thou goest forth and art anointed King. Nature disdains not braveries: why should we The sombre foil to all her splendours be? Let London rustle with rich apparelling, And all the ways, with festal faces lined, you. II.

POEMS ON PUBLIC AFFAIRS

Casement and coign and fluttering balcony. Wave welcome on the wind. Now the loud land flames with imperial gear, And life itself, so late in hues austere And the cold reign of iron custom bound. Puts off its gray subjection, and is here One moment throned and crowned. Now the long glories prance and triumph by: And now the pomps have passed, and we depart Each to the peace or strife of his own heart: And now the day whose bosom was so high Sinks billowing down: and twilight sorceries change Into remote and strange What is most known and nigh: And changelessly the river sends his sigh Down leagues of hope and fear, and pride and shame.

And life and death; dim-journeying passionless
To where broad estuary and beaconing ness
Look toward the outlands whence our fathers came.
And high on Druid mountains hath the sun
Flamed valediction, as the last lights died
Beyond that fatal wave, that from our side
Sunders the lovely and the lonely Bride
Whom we have wedded but have never won.

ODE ON CORONATION OF EDWARD VII.

IV

And night falls on an isle whose vassal seas
Remember not her prone regalities,
So withered from belief, so far and faint,
In such abjection before Time they lie,
Kingdoms and thrones forgotten of the sky.
Deira with her sea-face to the morn,
And Cumbria sunset-gazing; moist Dyvnaint,
A realm of coombs and tors; old greatnesses
From Dee to Severn, where the bards were born
Whose songs are in the wind by Idris' chair,
Whose lips won battles; and seats of puissance where,

With long grope of his desultory hand,
The ocean, prying deep into the land,
By Morven and the legends of wild Lorn,
Repents him, lost about Locheil: all these
Have been, and 'stablisht on their dust we stand;
Thy England; with the northern sister fair,
That hath the heath-bells in her blowing hair;
And the dark mountain maid
That dreams for ever in the wizard shade,
Hymning her heroes there.

V

O doom of overlordships! to decay First at the heart, the eye scarce dimmed at all: Or perish of much cumber and array, The burdening robe of empire, and its pall; Or, of voluptuous hours the wanton prey, Die of the poisons that most sweetly slay; Or, from insensate height, With prodigies, with light Of trailing angers on the monstrous night, Magnificently fall. Far off from her that bore us be such fate. And vain against her gate Its knocking. But by chinks and crannies, Death, Forbid the doorways, oft-times entereth. Let her drink deep of discontent, and sow Abroad the troubling knowledge. Let her show Whence glories come, and wherefore glories go, And what indeed are glories, unto these 'Twixt labour and the rest that is not ease Made blank and darksome; who have hardly heard Sound of her loftiest names, or any word Of all that hath in gold been said and sung, Since him of April heart and morning tongue, Her ageless singing-bird.

ODE ON CORONATION OF EDWARD VII.

For now the day is unto them that know. And not henceforth she stumbles on the prize; And yonder march the nations full of eves. Already is doom a-spinning, if unstirred In leisure of ancient pathways she lose touch Of the hour, and overmuch Recline upon achievement, and be slow To take the world arriving, and forget How perilous are the stature and port that so Invite the arrows, how unslumbering all The hates that watch and crawl. Nor must she, like the others, yield up yet The generous dreams! but rather live to be Saluted in the hearts of men as she Of high and singular election, set Benignant on the mitigated sea; That greatly loving freedom loved to free, And was herself the bridal and embrace Of strength and conquering grace.

PART THE FIRST

There was a time, it passeth me to say
How long ago, but sure 'twas many a day
Before the world had gotten her such store
Of foolish wisdom as she hath,—before
She fell to waxing gray with weight of years
And knowledge, bitter knowledge, bought with tears,—

When it did seem as if the feet of time
Moved to the music of a golden rhyme,
And never one false thread might woven be Athwart that web of worldwide melody.
'Twas then there lived a certain queen and king,
Unvext of wars or other evil thing,
Within a spacious palace builded high,
Whence they might see their chiefest city lie
About them, and half hear from their tall towers
Its populous murmur through the daylight hours,

And see beyond its walls the pleasant plain. One child they had, these blissful royal twain; Of whom 'tis told-so more than fair was he-There lurked at whiles a something shadowy Deep down within the fairness of his face; As 'twere a hint of some not-earthly grace, That made this mortal stripling rather seem The very dreaming offspring of a dream Than human child of human ancestry: So hid in moods fantastical was he Full often! Howsoever, he upgrew, And after certain years to manhood drew Nigh, and the great ones at his father's court, Seeing his graciousness of princely port, Rejoiced thereat; and many maidens' eyes Look'd on his face and gladdened, and the sighs Of many told I know not what sweet tales.

So, like to some fair ship with sunlit sails, Glided his youth amid a stormless sea, Till once by night there came mysteriously A wind of fate, and o'er an unknown deep Bore him perforce. It chanced that while in sleep He lay, there came to him a strange dim dream. 'Twas like as he did float adown a stream, In a lone boat that had nor sail nor oar

Yet seemed as it would glide for evermore, Deep in the bosom of a sultry land Fair with all fairness. Upon either hand Were hills green-browed and mist-engarlanded, And all about their feet the forest spread, Hoarding the cool and dusky silentness In many an unsunned hollow and hid recess. Nought of unlovely might be there espied; But in the heart of the deep woods and wide, And in the heart of all things, Mystery dwelled: A something more than outward eye beheld, A something only inward ear might hear. The very birds that preened their plumes anear, And babbled leafy loves, did seem to hold Some wizard secret on their tongues untold. And o'er the mountains came the hollow tone Of far-off horns by airy hunters blown, By airy hunters hunting shadowy deer In forests of illusion all the year.

So hour by hour (thus ran the Prince's dream) Glided the boat along the broadening stream; Till, being widowed of the sun her lord, The purblind day wept groping evenward: Whereafter sleep compelled to his mild yoke The bubbling clear souls of the feathered folk,

Sealing the amorous fountains of their song. Howbeit the Prince went onward all night long And never shade of languor came on him, Nor any weariness his eyes made dim. And so in season due he heard the breath Of the brief winds that wake ere darkness' death Sigh through the woods and all the valley wide: The rushes by the water answering sighed: Sighed all the river from its reedy throat. And like a wingèd creature went the boat, Over the errant water wandering free, As some lone seabird over a lone sea.

And Morn pale-haired with watery wide eyes Look'd up. And starting with a swift surprise, Sprang to his feet the Prince, and forward leant, His gaze on something right before him bent That like a towered and templed city showed, Afar off, dim with very light, and glowed As burnished seas at sundawn when the waves Make amber lightnings all in dim-roof'd caves That fling mock-thunder back. Long leagues away, Down by the river's green right bank it lay, Set like a jewel in the golden morn:
But ever as the Prince was onward borne, Nearer and nearer danced the dizzy fires

Of domes innumerable and sun-tipt spires And many a sky-acquainted pinnacle, Splendid beyond what mortal tongue may tell; And ere the middle heat of day was spent, He saw, by nearness thrice-magnificent, Hardly a furlong's space before him lie The City, sloping to the stream thereby.

And therewithal the boat of its own will Close to the shore began to glide, until, All of a sudden passing nigh to where The glistering white feet of a marble stair Ran to the rippled brink, the Prince outsprang Upon the gleamy steps, and wellnigh sang For joy, to be once more upon his feet, Amid the green grass and the flowers sweet. So on he paced along the river-marge, And saw full many a fair and stately barge At anchor in the quiet waters lie, Or shake her purfled streamers to the sky. And gazing upon these he came anon Unto a gate of sculptured gold that shone Embossed with gods and heroes 'neath a frieze All overwrought with carven phantasies. And in the shadow of the golden gate, One in the habit of a porter sate,

Who looked upon the Prince with wondering air, And greeting lowly thus bespake him fair: 'Sir, I perceive thou art of mortal race, The first that ever journeyed to this place! And if thy raiment do belie thee not, Thou shouldst be some king's son. And well I wot, If that be true was prophesied of yore, A wondrous fortune is for thee in store; For surely 'tis foretold in Doomful Writ (Oft have I heard the wise expounding it) That the first mortal who shall hither fare Shall have to wife our Maiden-Queen, and share—So blest above all sons of men is he—Her sceptre and her immortality.'

With that the Prince, and his right willing guide, Went straightway through the gate, and stood inside The wall, that, builded of a wan white stone, Begirt the city like a silver zone.

And thence down many a spacious way they passed, Each one appearing goodlier than the last, Cool with the presence of benignant trees And fountains playing before palaces.

And whichsoever way the Prince might look, Another marvel, and another, took

And holding talk together as they went, The Prince besought his guide to tell him why Of all the many folk that passed them by There was not one that had the look of eld, Or yet of life's mid-years; for they beheld Only young men and damsels everywhere, Nor ever saw they one that was not fair. Whereat the stripling: 'Master, thou hast seen, Belike, the river that doth flow between Flowers and grasses at the city's feet?' And when the Prince had rendered answer meet, 'Then,' said the other, 'know that whosoe'er Drinks of the lapping wave that brimmeth there (It matters not how many are his years) Thenceforward from that moment he appears Like as he was in noon of youth, before His mounting summers overtopped a score: And so the people of this land possess, Age after age, unaltering agelessness.'

Scarce had he told this marvel when there rose Somewhat of tumult, ruffling the repose Of the wide splendid street; and lifting up His eyes, the Prince beheld a glittering troop Of horsemen, each upon a proud-neck'd steed, Toward them coming at a gentle speed.

And as the cavalcade drew on apace,

A new joy blossomed in the cloudless face

Of his companion duteous at his side.

'Thou shalt behold our Queen,' the stripling cried,—

'Even the fairest of ten thousand fair;
With whom was never maiden might compare
For very perfectness!' While yet he spake,
On all the air a silver sound 'gan break
Of jubilant and many-tongued acclaim,
And golden-charioted the bright queen came;
And looking forth upon the multitude
Her eyes beheld the stranger where he stood;
And round about him was the loyal stir:
And all his soul went forth in love to her.

But even while he gazed on her, behold, That city fleeted into twilight cold; And sundering waters lay like time between Him and its marvels; and he saw the Queen Fading afar upon a fading shore; And woke to be her bondsman evermore.

PART THE SECOND

A FEARFUL and a lovely thing is Sleep,
And mighty store of secrets hath in keep;
And those there were of old who well could guess
What meant his fearfulness and loveliness,
And all his many shapes of life and death,
And all the secret things he uttereth.
But Wisdom lacketh sons like those that were,
And Sleep hath never an interpreter:
So there be none that know to read aright
The riddles he propoundeth every night.

And verily, of all the wondrous things
By potence wrought of mortal visionings
In that dark house whereof Sleep hath the keys—
Of suchlike miracles and mysteries
Not least, meseems, is this among them all:
That one in dream enamoured should fall,
And ever afterward, in waking thought,
Worship the phantom which the dream hath brought.

Howbeit such things have been, and in such wise Did that king's son behold, with mortal eyes,

A more than mortal loveliness, and thus Was stricken through with love miraculous.

For evermore thereafter he did seem
To see that royal maiden of his dream
Unto her palace riding sovranly;
And much he marvelled where that land might be
That basking lay beneath her beauty's beams,
Well knowing in his heart that suchlike dreams
Come not in idleness, but evermore
Are Fate's veiled heralds that do fly before
Their mighty master as he journeyeth,
And sing strange songs of life and love and death.

Wherefore he did scarce ought but dream all day Of that far land revealed of sleep, that lay He knew not where; and musing more and more On her the mistress of that unknown shore, There fell a sadness on him, thus to be Vext with desire of her he might not see Yet could not choose but long for; till erewhile Nor man nor woman might behold the smile Make sudden morning of his countenance, But likest one he seemed half-sunk in trance, That wanders groping in a shadowy land, Hearing strange things that none can understand.

Now after many days and nights had passed,
The queen, his mother well-beloved, at last,
Being sad at heart because his heart was sad,
Would e'en be told what hidden cause he had
To be cast down in so mysterious wise:
And he, beholding by her tearful eyes
How of his grief she was compassionate,
No more a secret made thereof, but straight
Discovered to her all his wondrous dream—
The mystic happy marvel of the stream,
A fountain running Youth to all the land;
Flowing with deep dim woods on either hand
Where through the boughs did birds of strange song flit:

And all beside the bloomy banks of it
The city with its towers and domes far-seen.
And then he told her how that city's queen
Did pass before him like a breathing flower,
That he had loved her image from that hour.
'And sure am I,' upspake the Prince at last,
'That somewhere in this world so wide and vast Lieth the land mine eyes have inly seen;—
Perhaps in very truth my spirit hath been Translated thither, and in very truth
Hath seen the brightness of that city of youth.
Who knows?—for I have heard a wise man say

How that in sleep the souls of mortals may, At certain seasons which the stars decree, From bondage of the body be set free To visit farthest countries, and be borne Back to their fleshly houses ere the morn.'

At this the good queen, greatly marvelling,
Made haste to tell the story to the king;
Who hearing laughed her tale to scorn. But when
Weeks followed one another, and all men
About his person had begun to say
'What ails our Prince? He groweth day by day
Less like the Prince we knew . . . wan cheeks, and eyes

Hollow for lack of sleep, and secret sighs . . .

Some hidden grief the youth must surely have,'—
Then like his queen the king himself grew grave;
And thus it chanced one summer eventide,
They sitting in an arbour side by side,
All unawares the Prince passed by that way,
And as he passed, unmark'd of either—they Nought heeding but their own discourse—could hear

Amidst thereof his own name uttered clear, And straight was 'ware it was the queen who spake, And spake of him; whereat the king 'gan make

Answer in this wise, somewhat angerly: The youth is crazed, and but one remedy Know I, to cure such madness—he shall wed Some princess; ere another day be sped, Myself will bid this dreamer go prepare To take whom I shall choose for wife; some fair And highborn maiden, worthy to be queen Hereafter.'—So the Prince, albeit unseen, Heard, and his soul rebelled against the thing His sire had willed; and slowly wandering About the darkling pleasance—all amid A maze of intertangled walks, or hid In cedarn glooms, or where mysterious bowers Were heavy with the breath of drowsed flowers-Something, he knew not what, within his heart Rose like a faint-heard voice and said 'Depart From hence and follow where thy dream shall lead.' And fain would he have followed it indeed. But wist not whither it would have him go.

Howbeit, while yet he wandered to and fro, Among his thoughts a chance remembrance leapt All sudden—like a seed, that long hath slept In earth, upspringing as a flower at last, When he that sowed forgetteth where 'twas cast; A chance remembrance of the tales men told

Concerning one whose wisdom manifold
Made all the world to wonder and revere—
A mighty mage and learn'd astrologer
Who dwelt in honour at a great king's court
In a far country, whither did resort
Pilgrims innumerable from many lands,
Who crossed the wide seas and the desert sands
To learn of him the occult significance
Of some perplexing omen, or perchance
To hear forewhisperings of their destiny
And know what things in aftertime should be.
'Now surely,' thought the Prince, 'this subtle seer,

To whom the darkest things belike are clear, Could read the riddle of my dream and tell Where lieth that strange land delectable Wherein mine empress hath her dwelling-place. So might I look at last upon her face, And make an end of all these weary sighs, And melt into the shadow of her eyes! 'Thus musing, for a little space he stood As holden to the spot; and evil, good, Life, death, and earth beneath and heaven above, Withered to less than shadows,—only Love, With harpings of an hundred harps unseen, Filled all the emptiness where these had been.

But soon, like one that hath a sudden thought, He lifted up his eyes, and turning sought The halls once more where he was bred, and passed Through court and corridor, and reached at last His chamber, in a world of sheen and shade, Where the full moon on gorgeous arras played. Here he put off in haste his courtly dress For raiment of a lesser sumptuousness (A sober habit such as might disguise His royal rank in any stranger's eyes) And taking in his hand three gems that made Three several splendours in the moonlight, laid These in his bosom; then all noiselessly, And watch'd but of the peopled tapestry, Down the wide stair from creaking floor to floor Passed, and went forth from the great palace door, And crossed the silent city, and sped alone, Onward and onward, into the Unknown.

PART THE THIRD

145

So without rest or tarriance all that night, Until the world was blear with coming light, Forth fared the princely fugitive, nor stayed His wearied feet till morn returning made

VOL. II.

Some village all a-hum with wakeful stir;
And from that place the royal wayfarer
Went ever faster on and yet more fast,
Till, ere the noontide sultriness was past,
Upon his ear the burden of the seas
Came dreamlike, heard upon a cool fresh breeze
That tempered gratefully a fervent sky.
And many an hour ere sundown he drew nigh
A fair-built seaport, warder of the land
And watcher of the wave, with odours fanned
Of green fields and of blue from either side;
A pleasant place, wherein he might abide,
Unknown of man or woman, till such time
As any ship should sail to that far clime
Where lived the famous great astrologer.

Entered within its gates, a wanderer Besoiled with dust and nowise richly drest, Yet therewithal a prince and princeliest Of princes, with the press of motley folk He mixed unheeded and unknown, nor spoke To any, no man speaking unto him, But, being wearied sore in every limb, Sought out a goodly hostel where he might Rest him and eat and tarry for the night: And having eaten he arose and passed

Down to the wharves where many a sail and mast Showed fiery-dark against the setting sun: There, holding talk with whom he chanced upon, In that same hour by great good hap he found The master of a vessel outward-hound Upon the morrow for that selfsame port Whither he sought to go (where dwelt at court The mage deep learn'd in every starry sign). An honest man, all breezy from the brine, Was this good master-mariner; and since He had no scorn of well-got gain, the Prince Agreed to pay him certain sums in gold, And go aboard his vessel, ere were told Two hours of sunlight on the coming day; And thus agreed they wended each his way, For the dusk hour was nigh, and all the West Lay emptied of its sun. But as he pressed Up the long seaward-sloping street that ran Through half the town, the Prince sought out man

Who dealt in pearls and diamonds and all Manner of stones which men do precious call; To whom the least of his three gems he sold For a great price, and laden with the gold Forthwith returned unto his hostelry And dreamed all night of seaports and the sea.

Early the morrow-morn, a fair soft gale Blowing from overland, the ship set sail At turning of the tide; and from her deck The Prince gazed till the town became a speck, And all the shore was but a memory: And still he gazed, though more he might not see Than the wide waters and the great wide sky. And many a long unchangeful day went by Ere land was sighted, but at length uprose A doubtful dusky something, toward the close Of the last hour before a sultry noon: Most like an isle of cloud it seemed, but soon The sailors knew it for the wished strand, And ere the evenfall they reached the land, And that same night the royal wanderer lay In a strange city, amid strange folk, till Day Rose from the dim sea's lap and with his wings Fanned into wakefulness all breathing things.

Then he uprose, but going forth that morn A sadness came upon him, and forlorn He felt within himself, and nowise light Of heart: for all his lonely travel might Prove void and fruitless and of no avail (Thus pondered he), and should it wholly fail, What then were left for him to do? Return

To his own country, that his kin might learn To know him duped and fooled of fantasies, Blown hither and thither by an idle breeze From Dreamland? Or in lieu, perchance, of this, Wander unresting, reft of hope and bliss, A mariner on a sea that hath no coast, Seeking a shade, himself a shade, and lost In shadows, as a wave is lost i' the sea.

Thus in a heart not lightsome pondered he, And roamed from unfamiliar street to street, Much marvelling that all he chanced to meet Showed faces troubled as his own: for some Did weep outright, and over all a gloom Hung, as a cloud that blotteth out the sun. Wherefore the Prince addressed him unto one Of sadder visage even than the rest, Who, ever as he walked, or beat his breast Or groaned aloud, or with his fingers rent His robe, and, being besought to say what meant This look of rue on all men's faces, cried In loud amazement, 'What, can any abide Within this city, having ears to hear, Yet know not how this morn the mighty seer Hath died and left the land all desolate? For now, when sudden ills befall the state,

There will be none to warn or prophesy As he, but when calamities are nigh No man will know till they be come and we Be all undone together, woe is me!'

Thus ended he his outcry, and again Passed on his way and mixed with other men Scarce joyfuller than he, if less they spake. Meanwhile upon the Prince's heart there brake Grief like a bitter wind, beneath whose breath Hope paled and sickened well-nigh unto death: For lo, those dumb and formless fears that came Within his heart that morn, and, like a flame That flickers long and dimly ere it die, Tarried and would not pass, but fitfully Flickered and flared and paled and flared again,-Lo, those mysterious messengers of pain, Dumb formless fears, were they not verified? And lo, that voyage o'er the waters wide, Was it not vain and a most empty thing? And what might now the years avail to bring, But hopes that barren live and barren die?

Thus did his heart with many an inward sigh Ask of itself, though answer there was none To be returned: and so the day, begun

Tristfully, trailed an ever wearier wing; Till toward night another questioning Like a strange voice from far beset his soul: And as a low wind wails for very dole About a tarn whereof the listless wave Maketh no answer to its plaining, save A sound that seems the phantom of its own. So that low voice making unbidden moan No answer got, saving the many sighs Its echoes; and in this reproachful wise, Heaping new pain on him disconsolate, The low voice spake and spake, importunate: O Prince that wast and wanderer that art, Say doth love live within thy hidden heart (Love born of dream but nurtured wakingly) Ev'n as that Once when thy soul's eyes did see Love's visible self, and worshipt? Or hast thou Fall'n from thy faith in Her and Love ere now, And is thy passion as a robe outworn? Nay, love forbid! Yet wherefore art thou lorn Of hope and peace if Love be still thine own? For, were the wondrons vision thou hast known Indeed Love's voice and Fate's (which are the same) Then, even as surely as the vision came, _So surely shall it be fulfilled, if faith Abide in thee; but if thy spirit saith

Treason of Love or Fate, and unbelief
House in thy heart, then surely shall swift grief
Find thee, and hope (that should be as a breath
Of song undying) shall even die the death,
And thou thyself the death-in-life shalt see,
O Prince that wast, O wanderer that shalt be!

So spake the Voice. And in the pauses of That secret Voice there 'gan to wake and move, Deep in his heart, a thing of blackest ill-The shapeless shadow men call Doubt, until That hour all unacquainted with his soul: And being tormented sore of this new dole, There came on him a longing to explore That sleep-discovered flowery land once more. Isled in the dark of the soul; for he did deem That were he once again to dream The Dream, His faith new-stablished would stand, and be No longer vext of this infirmity. And so that night, ere lying down to sleep, There came on him, half making him to weep And half to laugh that such a thing should be, A mad conceit and antic fantasy (And yet more sad than merry was the whim) To crave this boon of Sleep, beseeching him To send the dream of dreams most coveted.

And ere he lay him down upon his bed, A soft sweet song was born within his thought; But if he sang the song, or if 'twas nought But the soul's longing whispered to the soul, Himself knew hardly, while the passion stole From that still depth where passion lieth prone, And voiced itself in this-like monotone:

O Sleep, thou hollow sea, thou soundless sea, Dull-breaking on the shores of haunted lands, Lo, I am thine: do what thou wilt with me.

But while, as yet unbounden of thy bands, I hear the breeze from inland chide and chafe Along the margin of thy muttering sands,

Somewhat I fain would crave, if thou vouchsafe To hear mine asking, and to heed wilt deign. Behold, I come to fling me as a waif

Upon thy waters, O thou murmuring main! So on some wasteful island cast not me, Where phantom winds to phantom skies complain,

And creeping terrors crawl from out the sea, (For such thou hast)—but o'er thy waves not cold Bear me to yonder land once more, where She

Sits throned amidst of magic wealth untold: Golden her palace, golden all her hair, Golden her city 'neath a heaven of gold!

So may I see in dreams her tresses fair Down-falling, as a wave of sunlight rests On some white cloud, about her shoulders bare, Nigh to the snowdrifts twain which are her breasts.'

So ran the song,—say rather, so did creep,
With drowsy faltering feet unsure, till Sleep
Himself made end of it, with no rude touch
Sealing the lips that babbled overmuch.
Howbeit the boon of boons most coveted
Withholden was, and in that vision's stead
Another Dream from its dim hold uprose,
Which he who tells the tale shall straight disclose.

PART THE FOURTH

That night he dreamed that over him there stole A change miraculous, whereby his soul Was parted from his body for a space, And through a labyrinth of secret ways

Entered the world where dead men's ghosts abide To seek the Seer who yestermorn had died. And there in very truth he found the Seer, Who gazing on him said, 'What wouldst thou here, O royal-born, who visitest the coasts Of darkness, and the dwellings of the ghosts?'

Then said the Prince, 'I fain would know to find The land as yet untrod of mortal-kind Which I beheld by gracious leave of Sleep.' To whom the Spirit: 'O Prince, the seas are deep And very wide betwixt thee and that land, And who shall say how many perils stand As armed hosts betwixt that land and thee? Moreover, somewhere guarded jealously, There shines a wondrous jewel which men call The Emerald of the Puissance Mystical; And since thou cravest counsel, be it known That save thou win this wondrous emerald stone, Seeking through all the world thou shalt not find The land thou wouldst, but easeless as the wind Shalt wander foiled, and have no mate but Pain, And knock at all the doors of bliss in vain.

For in a certain land there once did dwell (How long ago it needs not I should tell)

At the king's court a great astrologer, Ev'n such as erst was I, but mightier And far excelling; and it came to pass That he fell sick; and very old he was; And knowing that his end was nigh, he said To him that sat in sorrow by his bed, "O master well-beloved and matchless king, Take thou and keep this lowly offering In memory of thy servant"; whereupon The king perceived it was a gem that shone Like the sea's heart: and secret as the sea, This word was graven in unknown charact'ry He that hath Me may sail where no man fares: He that hath Me may dare what no man dares. So the king took the graven gem betwixt His fingers, and upon the legend fixed His eyes, and said unto the dying Seer, "Now who shall render this dark scripture clear That I may know the meaning of the gift?" And the mage oped his mouth and strove to lift His voice, but could not, for the wished word Clave to his rattling throat, that no man heard: And age by age the jewel passeth down From sire to son, and ever in the crown It shineth of that country's kings, being called Ev'n to this day the mystic emerald;

But no man living, be he ne'er so wise, Hath guessed wherein its mighty virtue lies.'

'O Master,' said the Prince, 'and wilt not thou Instruct me where to find the king that now Weareth this jewel in his diadem?' To whom the Spirit, 'O youth, and if the gem Be worth the finding, is't not also worth The little pain of seeking through the earth?—Yet so thou may'st not wander witlessly, Look thou forget not this I tell to thee:

When in thy journeyings thou shalt dream once more

The fateful dream thou dreamedst heretofore, That filled thy veins as with a dancing wine, Till all thy being brimm'd over—by that sign Thou mayest know thyself at last to be Within the borders of his empery Who hath the mystic jewel; and its gleam Shall light thee to the country of thy dream.'

'But,' said the Prince, 'when all the world's highways

My feet have trod, till after length of days I reach the land where lies the wondrous stone, How shall I make so rare a thing mine own?

For had I riches more than could be told,
What king would sell his jewels for my gold?'
And on this wise the answer of the Seer
Fell in the hollow of his dreaming ear:
'Behold this Iron Chain,—of power it is
To heal all manner of mortal maladies
In him that wears it round his neck but once,
Between the sun's downgoing and the sun's
Uprising: take it thou, and hold it fast
Until by seeking long thou find at last
The king that hath the mystic emerald stone:
And having found him, thou shalt e'en make known

The virtues dwelling in this charmed chain:
Which when the king doth hear he will be fain
To have possession of so strange a thing;
And thou shalt make a bargain with the king
To give the Iron Chain in bartery
For that miraculous jewel whereof he Knows not the secret worth. And when at last
The emerald stone in thy own hands thou hast,
Itself shall guide thee whither thou wouldst

go-

Ev'n to the land revealed of Sleep, where no Grief comes to mar their music, neither sound Of sighing, while the golden years go round.'

So spake the spirit unto him that dreamed, And suddenly that world of shadow seemed To waver and labour, and its shapes to blend And huddie: and the dream was at an end.

Then slept the Prince a deep sweet sleep that knew

Nor dream nor vision; till the dawn upgrew, And all his soul a sudden halt did make About the confines dim of sleep and wake, Where wandering lights and wildered shadows meet.

But soon he rose, and leaping to his feet Marvelled, and could in no wise understand; For lo, the Iron Chain was in his hand!

PART THE FIFTH

So, being risen, the Prince in brief while went Forth to the market-place, where babblement Of them that bought and them that sold was one Of many sounds in murmurous unison—
-A buzzing as of bees about their hives, With shriller gossiping of garrulous wives

Piping a tuneless treble thereunto: In midst whereof he went his way as who Looketh about him well before he buys, To mark the manner of their merchancise: Till chancing upon one who cried for sale A horse, and seeing it well-limb'd and hale, And therewithal right goodly to behold, He bought the beast and paid the man in gold. And having gotten him the needful gear Rode from the market, nothing loth to hear Its garrulous wives no longer, and the din Of them that daily bought and sold therein. So from the place he passed, and slowly down Street after street betook him till the town Behind him and the gates before him were. And all without was cornland green and fair.

And through the cornland wending many a mile And through the meadowland, he came erewhile To where the highways parted, and no man Was nigh to tell him whitherward they ran; But while he halted all in doubtful mood, An eagle, as if mourning for her brood Stolen, above him sped with rueful cry; And when that he perceived the fowl to fly Plaining aloud, unto himself he said,

'Now shall you mournful mother overhead Instruct the wandering of my feet, and they Shall follow where she leadeth': and away The bird went winging westward clamorously, That westward even in her wake went he. And it may be that in his heart there stirred Some feeling as of fellowship with the bird; For he, like her, was bound on a lone quest; And for his feet, as for her wings, no rest Might be, but only urgence of desire, And one far goal that seemed not ever nigher.

So through that country wended he his way, Resting anights, till on the seventh day He passed unwares into another land, Whose people's speech he could not understand— A tract o'errun with tribes barbarian, And blood-red from the strife of man with man: And truly 'twas a thing miraculous That one should traverse all that rude land thus, And no man rid him of his gold, nor raise A hand to make abridgment of his days; But there was that about him could make men's Hearts, ere they knew it, yield him reverence,— Perchance a sovran something in his eye, Whereat the fierce heart failed, it wist not why; т6т VOL. II.

Perchance that Fate which (hovering like a doubt Athwart his being) hemmed him round about, Gloomed as a visible shadow across his way, And made men fearful. Be this as it may, No harm befell him in that land, and so He came at last to where the ebb and flow Of other seas than he had wandered o'er Upflung to landward an attempered roar; And wandering downward to the beach, he clomb To topmost of a tall gray cliff, wherefrom He saw a smoke as of men's houses, far Off, from a jutting point peninsular Uprising: whence he deemed that there a town Must surely be. And so he clambered down The cliff, and getting him again to horse Thither along the seabound held his course, And reached that city about sunset-tide The smoking of whose hearths he had espied.

There at an hostel rested he, and there
Tarried the coming of the morn. But ere
He fell asleep that night, a wandering thought,
Through darkling byways of the spirit brought,
Knock'd at his soul for entrance, whispering low,
'What if to-night thou dream The Dream, and know

To-morrow, when thou wakest from that bliss,
The land wherein thou liest to be his
Who hath the mystic jewel in his keep?'
So, full of nattering hope he fell asleep,
And sleeping dreamed, but dreamed not that he would:

For at one time it seemed as if he stood Alone upon a sterile neck of land, Where round about him upon either hand Was darkness, and the cry of a dark sea, And worldwide vapours glooming thunderously: And ever as he stood, the unstable ground Slid from beneath his feet with a great sound. Till he could find no foothold anywhere That seemed not unsubstantial as the air. At otherwhiles he wandered all alone About a lonely land, and heard a moan As of some bird that sang and singing grieved; And peering all about the woods thick-leaved If so he might espy the bird, he found At length, after long searching, that the sound Even from the bottom of his own heart came. And unawares his own mouth sang the same. And then in dream 'twas like as years went by, And still he journeyed, hardly knowing why, Till at the last a mist about him fell,

And if the mist were death he could not tell, For after that he knew no more. And so He slept until the cock began to crow.

Then came the gladful morn, that sendeth sick Dreams flying, and all shapes melancholic That vex the slumbers of the love-distraught. Unto his heart the merry morning brought Cheer, and forewhisperings of some far-off rest, When he should end in sweet that bitter quest. But going forth that morn, and with his feet Threading the murmurous maze of street and street,

All strangely fell upon him everywhere
The things he saw and heard of foul or fair.
The thronging of the folk that filled the ways;
The hubbub of the street and market-place;
The sound of heavy wain-wheels on the stones;
The comely faces and ill-favoured ones;
The girls with apple-cheeks and hair of gold;
The gray locks and the wrinkles of the old;
All these remote and unfamiliar
Seem'd, and himself a something from afar,
Looking at men as shadows on the wall
And even the veriest shadow among them all.

But now when all things dreamwise seemed to swim

About the dubious eyes and ears of him, That nothing in the world might be believed, It chanced that on a sudden he perceived Where one that dealt in jewels sat within His doorway, hearkening to the outer din, As who cared nowise to make fast his ears Against the babble of the street-farers: Whereat the merchant, seeing a stranger pass, Guessed by his garb what countryman he was, And giving him good-day right courteously Bespake him in his mother-tongue; for he Had wandered in his youth o'er distant seas And knew full many lands and languages. Wherefore with him the royal stranger fell To talking cheerly, and besought him tell Whence all his gems were had and costly things, Talismans, amulets, and charmed rings: Whereto the other answered, They had come Some from a country not far hence, and some From out a land a thousand leagues away To eastward, ev'n the birthplace of the Day, The region of the sun's nativity; And giving ear to this right readily, The Prince would fain be told of him the way

To that far homeland of the youngling Day. So, being ask'd, the other answered, 'Sir, There liveth but one master-mariner Whose ship hath sailed so far: and that is he Who hither brought the jewels thou dost see. And now, as luck will have it for the nonce, He wills to voyage thitherward but once Before he dies—for he is old like me— And even this day se'nnight saileth he. Wherefore if thou be fain to see that land, There needeth only gold within thy hand: For gold, if that it jingle true and clear, Hath still a merry music for man's ear, And where is he that hateth sound of it?' So saying, the merchant bade the stranger sit, But the Prince thanked him for his courtesy, And went his way. And that day se'nnight he Was sailing toward the far-off morningland, And felt the skies about him like a band, And heard the low wind uttering numerous noise, And all the great sea singing as one voice.

PART THE SIXTH

Even as one voice the great sea sang. From out The green heart of the waters round about, Welled as a bubbling fountain silverly The overflowing song of the great sea; Until the Prince, by dint of listening long, Divined the purport of that mystic song; (For so do all things yield articulate breath Unto his ears who rightly hearkeneth) And, if indeed he heard that harmony Aright, in this wise came the song of the sea.

'Behold, all ye that stricken of love do lie, Wherefore in thraldom to a maiden's eye Lead ye the life of bondmen and of slaves? Lo, in the caverns and the depths of Me A thousand mermaids dwell beneath the waves; A thousand maidens meet for love have I, Ev'n I, the virgin-hearted cold chaste sea.

Behold, all ye that weary of life do lie, There is no rest at all beneath the sky

Save in the nethermost deepness of the deep, Only the silence and the midst of Me Can still the sleepless soul that fain would sleep; For such, a cool death and a sweet have I Ev'n I, the crystal-hearted cool sweet sea.

Behold, all ye that in my lap do lie,
To love is sweet and sweeter still to die,
And woe to him that laugheth me to scorn!
Lo, in a little while the anger of Me
Shall make him mourn the day that he was born:
For in mine hour of wrath no ruth have I,
Ev'n I, the tempest-hearted pitiless sea.'

So sang the waters, if indeed 'twere they
That sang unto the Prince's ears that day,
Since in the ship was not a soul besides
Could hear that burden of the voiceful tides;
For when he told the sailors of this thing,
And ev'n what words the waters seemed to sing,
They stared astonishment, and some, that had
More churlish souls than others, held him mad,
And laughed before his face outright. But when
The captain heard the gossip of his men
Touching this marvel, the strange news begot
No merry mood in him, who wist not what

Should be the meaning of the miracle, Nor whether 'twere an omen good or ill. Wherefore the old seafarer—having heard The tale retold with many an afterword The mariner's own most fruitful wit supplied To grace the telling—took the Prince aside, And ask'd him sundry questions privily Concerning this same singing of the sea. So the Prince told him all there was to tell, And when that he had heard, the old man fell To meditating much, and shook his head As one exceeding ill at ease, and said, 'I doubt the singing thou hast heard was no Voice of the waters billowing below, But rather of some evil spirit near, Who sought with singing to beguile thine ear, Spreading a snare to catch the soul of thee In meshes of entangling melody, Which taketh captive the weak minds of men. Therefore if thou shouldst hear the sound again, Look thou content thee not with hearkening, But cast thine eyes around, and mark what thing Thou seëst, and let no man know but me.'

So spake the white-haired wanderer of the sea. And on the morrow—when the sea-line grew

O'erhazed with visible heat, and no wind blew, And the half-stifled morning dropt aswoon Into the panting bosom of the noon— There came unto the Prince's ears anew The song that yestermorn had hearkened to. And lifting up his eyes in hope to see What lips they were that made such melody And filled him with the fulness of their sound, He saw the sun at highest of his round Show as a shield with one dark bloodstain blurred. By reason of the body of some great bird Like to an eagle, with wide wings outspread, Athwart the sunfire hovering dusky red. So to the master of the ship he told What he had witnessed, bidding him behold The marvel with his own eyes if he would; Who, though he strained his vision all he could, Yet might not once endure to look the sun I' the face; and calling to him one by one The whole ship's crew, he bade each mariner look

Sunward who could, but no man's eyes might brook

The glare upon them of the noontide rays And lidless fervour of that golden gaze: So none of them beheld the bodeful bird.

Then said the greybeard captain, hardly heard Amid the babble of voices great and small, 'The bird thou seëst is no bird at all, But some unholy spirit in guise of one; And I do fear that we are all undone If any amongst us hearken to its voice;— For of its mouth, I doubt not, was the noise Thou heardest as of dulcet carolling, When at thine ear the waters seemed to sing.'

And truly, many a wiser man than he Herein had farther strayed from verity; For that great bird that seemed to fan the sun's Face with its wings was even the same as once Flew screaming westward o'er the Prince's head, Beguiling him to follow where it fled. And bird it was not, but a spirit of ill, Man-hating, and of mankind hated still, And slave to one yet mightier demon-sprite Whose dwelling is the shadow of the night.

So the days passed, and always on the next
The bird-sprite like a baleful vision vexed
The happy-hearted sunlight; and each time
Its false sweet song was wedded to the rhyme
And chime of wind and wave—although it dropped

As honey changed to music—the Prince stopped His ears, and would not hear; and so the Sprite, Seeing his charmed songcraft of no might Him to ensnare who hearkened not at all, On the tenth day with dreadful noise let fall A tempest shaken from the wings of him, Whereat the eyes of heaven waxed thundrous-dim, Till the day-darkness blinded them, and fell Holding the world in night unseasonable. And from his beaked mouth the demon blew A breath as of a hundred winds, and flew Downward aswoop upon the labouring barque, And, covered of the blear untimely Dark, Clutch'd with his gripple claws the Prince his prey, And backward through the tempest soared away, Bearing that royal burden; and his eyes Were wandering wells of lightning to the skies.

Long time the Prince was held in swound, and knew

Nor outer world nor inner, as they flew From darkness unto darkness; till at last—The fierce flight over, and his body cast Somewhere alone in a strange place—the life Stirred in him faintly, as at feeble strife With covetous Death for ownership of him.

And 'fore his eyes the world began to swim All vague, and doubtful as a dream that lies Folked within another, petal-wise.

And therewithal himself but half believed His own eyes' testimony, and perceived The things that were about him as who hears A distant music throbbing toward his ears At noontide, in a flowery hollow of June, And listens till he knows not if the tune And he be one or twain, or near or far, But only feels that sound and perfume are, And tremulous light and leafy umbrage: so The Prince beheld unknowing, nor fain to know.

About him was a ruinous fair place,
Which Time, who still delighteth to abase
The highest, and throw down what men do build,
With splendid prideful barrenness had filled,
And dust of immemorial dreams, and breath
Of silence, which is next of kin to death.
A weedy wilderness it seemed, that was
In days forepast a garden, but the grass
Grew now where once the flowers, and hard by
A many-throated fountain had run dry,
Which erst all day a web of rainbows wove
Out of the body of the sun its love.

And but a furlong's space beyond, there towered In middest of that silent realm deflowered A palace builded of black marble, whence The shadow of a swart magnificence Falling, upon the outer space begot A dream of darkness when the night was not. Which while the Prince beheld, a wonderment Laid hold upon him, that he rose and went Toward the palace-portico apace, Thinking to read the riddle of the place. And entering in (for open was the door) From hall to hall he passed, from floor to floor, Through all the spacious house, and (saving where The subtle spider had his darksome lair) No living creature could he find in it. Howbeit, by certain writing that was writ Upon the wall of one dark room and bare, He guessed that some great sorcerer had there Inhabited, a slave to his own lust Of evil power and knowledge, till the dust Received his dust, and darkness had his soul; But ere death took him he had willed the whole Of his possessions to a Spirit of Ill, His sometime mate in commerce damnable, Making him lord of that high house, wherein The twain had sealed their covenant of sin.

With that a horror smote the Prince, and fain Would he have fled that evil spirit's domain And shook its dust from off his feet that hour. But from a window of the topmost tower Viewing the dim-leaved wilderness without, Full plainly he perceived it hemmed about With waves, an island of the middle sea, In watery barriers bound insuperably; And human habitation saw he none, Nor heard one bird a-singing in the sun To lighten the intolerable stress Of utter undisputed silentness.

So by these signs he knew himself the thrall
Of that foul spirit unseen, and therewithal
Wholly unfellowed in captivity,
Bound round with fetters of the tyrannous sea.
And sick for very loneliness, he passed
Downward through galleries and chambers vast
To one wide hall wherefrom a vestibule
Opened into a dim green space and cool,
Where great trees grew that various fruitage bore

The like whereof he had not seen before, And hard by was a well of water sweet; And being an hungered he did pluck and eat

The strange fair fruit, and being athirst did drink The water, and lay down beside the brink; Till sleep, as one that droppeth from the skies, Dropt down, and made a mist about his eyes.

PART THE SEVENTH

But Sleep, who makes a mist about the sense, Doth ope the eyelids of the soul, and thence Lifteth a heavier cloud than that whereby He veils the vision of the fleshly eye. And not alone by dreams doth Sleep make known The sealed things and covert—not alone In visions of the night do mortals hear The fatal feet and whispering wings draw near—But dimly and in darkness doth the soul Drink of the streams of slumber as they roll, And win fine secrets from their waters deep: Yea, of a truth, the spirit doth grow in sleep.

Howbeit I know not whether as he slept A voice from out the depth of dream upleapt And whispered in his ear; or whether he Grew to the knowledge blindly, as a tree

Waxes from bloom to fruitage, knowing not The manner of its growth: but this I wot, That rising from that sleep beside the spring The Prince had knowledge of a certain thing Whereof he had not wist until that hour—To wit, that two contending spirits had power Over his spirit, ruling him with sway Altern; as 'twere dominion now of Day And now of Dark; for one was of the light, And one was of the blackness of the night.

Now there be certain evil spirits whom The mother of the darkness in her womb Conceived ere darkness' self; and one of these Did rule that island of the middle seas Hemmed round with silence and enchantment dim. Nothing in all the world so pleasured him As filling human hearts with dolorousness And banning where another sprite did bless; But chiefly did his malice take delight In thwarting lovers' hopes and breathing blight Into the blossoms newly opened Of sweet desire, till all of sweet were fled. And (for he knew what secret hopes did fill The minds of men) 'twas even now his will To step between the Prince and his desire, YOL. II. 177 N

Nor suffer him to fare one furlong nigher Unto that distant-shining golden goal That beacon'd through the darkness to his soul.

And so the days, the sultry summer days, Went by, and wimpled over with fine haze The noiseless nights stole after them, as steals The moon-made shadow at some traveller's heels. And day by day and night by night the Prince Dwelt in that island of enchantment, since The hour when Evil Hap, in likeness of An eagle swooping from the clouds above, Did bind him body and soul unto that place. And in due time the summer waxed apace, And in due time the summer waned: and now The withered leaf had fallen from the bough, And now the winter came and now the spring; Yea, summer's self was toward on the wing From wandering overseas: and all this while The Prince abode in that enchanted isle, Marvelling much at Fortune and her ways.

Gathered themselves together into years,
And oftentimes his spirit welled in tears
From dawn to darkness and from dark to dawn,

By reason of the light of life withdrawn.

And if the night brought sleep, a fitful sleep,

Ine phantoms of a buried time would creep

Out of their hollow hiding-places vast,

Peopling his Present from the wizard Past.

Sometimes between the whirl of dream and dream,

All in a doubtful middle-world, a gleam

Went shivering past him through the chill grey space,

And lo, he knew it for his mother's face, And wept; and all the silence where he stood Wept with him. And at times the dreamer would Dream himself back beneath his father's roof At eventide, and there would hold aloof In silence, clothed upon with shadows dim. To hear if any spake concerning him; But the hours came and went and went and came And no man's mouth did ever name his name. And year by year he saw the queen and king Wax older, and beheld a shadowy thing Lurking behind them, till it came between His dreamsight and the semblance of the queen, From which time forth he saw her not: and when Another year had been it came again, And after that he saw his sire the king No more, by reason of the shadowy thing

Stepping between; and all the place became As darkness, and the echo of a name.

What need to loiter o'er the chronicle
Of days that brought no change? What boots it tell

The tale of hours whereof each moment was As like its fellow as one blade of grass Is to another, when the dew doth fall Without respect of any amongst them all? Enow that time in that enchanted air Nor slept nor tarried more than otherwhere, And so at last the captive lived to see The fiftieth year of his captivity. And on a day within that fiftieth year He wandered down unto the beach, to hear The breaking of the breakers on the shore. As he had heard them ofttimes heretofore In days when he would sit and watch the sea. If peradventure there some ship might be. But now his soul no longer yearned as then To win her way back to the world of men: For what could now his freedom profit him? The hope that filled youth's beaker to its brim The tremulous hand of age had long outspilled, And whence might now the vessel be refilled?

Moreover, after length of days and years The soul had ceased to beat her barriers, And like a freeborn bird that caged sings Had grown at last forgetful of her wings.

And so he took his way toward the sea-Not, as in former days, if haply he Might spy some ship upon the nether blue, And beckon with his hands unto the crew, But rather with an easeful heart to hear What things the waves might whisper to his ear Of counsel wise and comfortable speech. But while he walked about the yellow beach, There came upon his limbs an heaviness, For languor of the sultry time's excess; And so he lay him down under a tree That leaned back from the wave, and there the sea Sang him to sleep. And sleeping thus he dreamed *A dream of very wonderment: him seemed The spirit that half an hundred years before In likeness of an eagle came and bore His body to that island on a day, Came yet again and found him where he lay, And taking him betwixt his talons flew O'er seas and far-off countries, till they drew Nigh to a city that was built between

Twin mountains in a pleasant land and green; And there upon the higher mountain's top The bird that was no bird at all let drop Its burthen, and was seen of him no more.

Thereat he waked, and issuing from the door Of dream did marvel in his heart; because He found he had but dreamed the thing that was: For there, assuredly, was neither sea Nor Isle Enchanted; and assuredly He sat upon the peak of a great hill; And far below him, looking strangely still, Uptowered a city exceeding fair to ken, And murmurous with multitude of men.

PART THE EIGHTH

Now as it chanced, the day was almost spent When down the lonely mountain-side he went, The whitehaired man, the Prince that was; and ere He won the silence of the valley where The city's many towers uprose, the gate Was closed against him, for the hour was late.

So even as they that have not wherewithal To roof them from the rain if it should fall, Upon the grassy ground this king's son lay, And slept till nigh the coming of the day.

But while as any vagabond he slept
Or outcast from the homes of men, there crept
Unto him lying in such sorry sort
A something fairer than the kingliest court
In all the peopled world had witness of—
Even the shadow of the throne of Love,
That from a height beyond all height did creep
Along the pavement of the halls of sleep.
O fair and wonderful! that shadow was
The golden dream of dreams that came across
His youth, full half an hundred years before,
And sent him wandering through the world. Once more

In a lone boat that sails and oars had none, Midmost a land of summer and the sun Where nothing was that was not fair to see, Adown a gliding river glided he, And saw the city that was built thereby, And saw the chariot of the queen draw nigh, And gazed upon her in the goodly street; Whereat he waked and rose upon his feet,

Remembering the Vision of the Seer,
And what the spirit spake unto his ear:
'When in thy wanderings thou shalt dream once

The fateful dream thou dreamedst heretofore, That filled thy veins as with a dancing wine Till all thy being brimm'd over—by that sign Thou mayest know thyself at last to be Within the borders of his empery Who hath the mystic emerald; and its gleam Shall light thee to the country of thy dream.'

Then rose the heart within his heart and said:
O bitter scornful Fate, in days long dead
I asked and thou denied'st mine asking: now
The boon can nowise profit me, and thou
Dost mock me with bestowal!' Thereupon
He fell to thinking of his youthhood gone,
And wept. For now the goal, the longtime-sought,
Was even at hand, 'But how shall I,' he thought,
'I that am old and sad and hoary-haired,
Enter the place for youth and love prepared?
For in my veins the wellspring of desire
Hath failed, and in mine heart the golden fire
Burneth no more for ever. I draw near
The night that is about our day, and hear
